Is China launching a lithium mining project in Mali?

China's top lithium production firm launched the first phase of a lithium mining project in Mali. Ganfeng Lithium announced the launch of the first phase of its Goulamina lithium mine in southern Bougouni in mid-December, according to a Chinese online news outlet.

Where does lithium come from in Mali?

The Goulamina project, situated approximately 93 miles (150 kilometers) south of Mali's capital, Bamako, is among the world's largest untapped hard rock lithium reserves, according to Leo Lithium. In addition to hard rock deposits, lithium is extensively extracted from salt lakes, particularly in South America.

Are lithium extraction methods sustainable?

Conventional lithium extraction methods, such as mining hard-rock ores and extracting from brines, are energy-intensive, emit greenhouse gases, and cause environmental damage. These methods highlight the need for sustainable alternatives.

Which country produces the most EV batteries in the world?

China leads the global electric vehicle (EV) market, accounting for around 60 percent of worldwide battery -powered car deliveries. The country also accounts for 77 percent of the world's EV batteries, with combined exports exceeding $139 billion in 2023.

Will Mali buy goulamina mine?

Now, the Mali government plans to acquire a 35 percent stake in the Goulamina mine, with 10 percent granted for free and 25 percent purchased. According to the South China Morning Post (SCMP), once completed, Ganfeng Lithium will hold 65 percent, while the Mali government retains the remaining share.
